

The EU and the UN in a New World Order: Who Can Resolve the World's Conflicts?

We are pleased to invite you to a public debate meeting on the EU and the UN in a new world order and who should be responsible for resolving the world's conflicts.

Date: 21 september 2026

Time: 16.30 - 18.00

Place: Dokk1, room 2, Hack Kampmanns Plads 2, Aarhus

In a time marked by geopolitical tensions and growing competition between great powers, the role of international institutions is once again up for debate. While the UN still provides the central framework for global cooperation, great powers such as China, the US, and Russia are seeking increasingly greater influence on the international agenda.

In this debate we focus on key questions concerning the role of the EU and the UN in a new world order. Can a rules-based international order persist without a strong UN? Is the UN's most crucial challenge the lack of reform or the lack of political will among its member states? Can the EU strengthen support for multilateralism in an increasingly conflict-ridden world? Should the EU devote more political capital to the UN, or focus on developing its own solutions?
